

This morning at around 9:15 AM [REDACTED], Alfred and I were in the process of putting up our big shop fans into the storage above our office for the winter, the top storage is about 10ft high. Alfred was on top of the office, [REDACTED] was to my right talking to me through the open door of the Green John Deere tractor. I was operating the tractor. [REDACTED] was loading up the fans. Alfred was on top waiting for me to lift the fans up to him. Prior to me lifting the fan to Alfred, Alfred insisted on vacuuming the top of the storage. So, while [REDACTED] and I were talking waiting for Alfred to finish vacuuming, this took about 5 minutes for Alfred to ~~vacuum~~^{finish} vacuuming. Alfred faced [REDACTED] and I and began to make noise with the PVC extensions that he made himself. He started banging the floor of the storage and started banging on the ladder. I'm guessing to get [REDACTED] attention I did not hear ~~any~~ Alfred say [REDACTED] name or mine because I was in the cab of the tractor. Finally [REDACTED] turned from me and faced Alfred and walked towards him, and looked up at Alfred. I do not know if words were exchanged but Alfred looked ~~carburetor~~ frustrated then he threw the PVC pipe that he had used as a homemade extension downwards at [REDACTED] at a speed that to me, seemed unreasonable and dangerous the pipe struck [REDACTED] on the bridge of the nose, [REDACTED] bent over and grabbed his nose walked to the bathroom with Alfred following him [REDACTED] said "You busted my nose Mofler" [REDACTED] then he walked to the admin building with Alfred following him. I told [REDACTED] to let me see if his nose was O.K he showed me before walking to the office it was bloody and looked like he had a small gash on the bridge of nose.

Also when I first started working in Fleet maintenance I noticed [REDACTED] was struck on the head by Alfred pretty hard. on one occasion. I've seen Clarence hit [REDACTED] on top of the head too. but in a much more playful manner than Alfred. [REDACTED]
